This Analytical Guide to Hindustani is intended as a help to those about to prepare for the Army Examinations, and is required to be read with the help of a Munshi.

The principal points of grammar are shown in tables and illustrations to serve as ready reference for practical purposes. A few out of hundreds of Hindustani sayings, the ornament of the language as is its poetry, are also given.

The present treatment of the subject is the result of some lessons which were prepared for my pupils and I am indebted to them, especially Lt. J. H. S. Elliott R. E. and Lt. J. D. R. Fairly for their kind support and encouragement, to whom I express my sincere thanks.

I also thank the printers and publishers for carrying this work through successfully with zeal and patience amidst many short-comings in war time.

INTRODUCTION

Urdu or Hindustani is a language which is at present spoken and understood well throughout India as well as in other parts of the world. It is written either in Persian or Nagri script. Its grammar is very simple. Spelling is easy to learn being appropriately represented by phonetic letters.

Hindustani is a selfmade natural product of the Indian People representing both the Hindu and the Islamic civilizations. It was neither created nor formed by any one section of the people. Its basis is Hindi, and all parts of speech except some nouns and adjectives are all of Hindi origin. It is capable of assimilating words of other languages conveniently and as such its vocabulary has been enriched by Arabic, Persian, Dutch, French, Portuguese, Spanish and now English words. Over 1000 English words are freely used and day by day its vocabulary is thus being vastly increased. It is written either in Persian or Nagri script irrespective of caste or creed. Today it aptly claims to be the language of the People, one fifth of the human race.

Urdu is not born of Persian although it influenced Urdu considerably giving it its Arab-Persi alphabet with some changes to represent certain additional Indian phonetic sounds. Urdu grew out of Western Hindi an offshoot of old Prakrit which was current independent of Sanskrit, for ages in the districts around Delhi and Meerut. From the twelfth century A. D. it began to grow, a 'Hindustani' as a common language of the country. It received a direct impetus under the scholarly sovereigns in the Deccan (S. India), from the sixteenth century onward. It has been developing of itself amidst various drastic political changes in the country.

(IV)

Hindustani in the hands of Europeans got systematised. John Joshua Cutler, a Prussian by birth was the first European who wrote a roman Hindustani Grammar in Latin in the beginning of Eighteenth Century (1715 A.D ?), and well within about a Century more than twentyfive Europeans compiled and published several Hindustani grammars, vocabularies, dictionaries, historical discussions and lessons in Roman, Nagri and Persian scripts. Agentative 'ne' is not found in Hindustani of this period.

For about half a century, from 1787 A. D. Hindustani was given a special treatment at Fort William College at Calcutta under Doctor John Gilchrist. It was recognized as an official language by the British in 1832 in place of Persian which was the official language of the Muslim Courts at Delhi.

Roman script with 23 sounds is not adequate to represent all the sounds in Hindustani and some of them are used with dots or dashes to supply the deficiency. As against this, several different letters are proposed for adoption in roman Hindustani. As a matter of fact dots, dashes and marks are used in the existing roman letters and introduction of quite different letters would mean an extra burden on the learners. The language of the people means the thought, action and life of that people, depicted in their literature and to know those people properly it is necessary to learn their language in their own script; and spoken language is different from the written.

Hindi is written in some four different kinds of scripts, one of which is Nagri. The Nagri letters do not represent all the sounds in Urdu; but the deficiency is being now supplied with the uses of dots or marks over the existing Nagri letters. Hindustani (including both Nagri as well as Arab-Persi-Urdu Phonetic sounds) has 60 sounds, 44 consonants and 12 vowels. Roman script has 23 letters to represent these sounds and are deficient. One has to learn about 70 different forms of these 23 roman letters, 50 different letters of Nāgri script, whereas Urdu in Arab—Persi script presents to the learner only 18 primary letters of different forms with about 5 easy vowel signs, mostly of dashes or commas. These 18 forms with dots or dashes make only 35 letters in all in Arab-Persi-Urdu alphabet, for nearly all Hindustani sounds. A Primer for learning scripts on this line is being prepared by the author.

There are people in this country with several vernaculars with their several scripts including English. Knowledge of English has been spreading far and wide in this country and there are people who know English but do not know Hindustani. Foreigners fresh to this country feel necessary to learn Urdu which is found useful to them as a lingua franca of the country. Considering leisure and opportunity at their disposal Roman script has been found very convenient for those learners who know English, to enable them to get a firsthand primary knowledge of Hindustani for practical utility. After this stage it has been found in case they are so interested very convenient for them to learn both the scripts, Nāgri as well as Arab-Persi; and several of my British students have successfully done so after passing their Elementary Urdu Test Examination.

Now-a-days Roman Urdu is making great strides. Literary books, school books, magazines, journals, army instructions, orders, advertisements and reviews are being published in large scale in roman Urdu. Its importance is thus much increasing day by day. The Aryans gave to Hindustani their Nāgri script, the Muslims their Arab-Persi script, the British their roman script—all enriching it to its unique and wonderful plastic grandeur.

FOREWORD

I was fortunate enough to be one of Mr. Titi's students at the time he was preparing this book, and so feel that perhaps I know better than most the conscientious, painstaking thoroughness with which he approached it. It is essentially an analysis of Hindustani, an attempt to reduce every rule of importance into the smallest possible space. It is inevitable then that a book which contains more than the usual "Introduction" to the subject, and confines it in a smaller space, will not present a very easy or attractive appearance to the student,—specially when it is produced under the present wartime conditions. But for these reasons it should be the more attractive to Munshis in stating in a most logical and concise form every rule he will have to teach his students, while at the same time providing the student with a summary for revision and a book of reference,—Mr. Titi stresses that it is only to be used with the help of a teacher.

It has three other novel features. First, it fills a gap found in other Introductions to this subject by explaining what the language is, and what part it plays in the life of the country—questions which often trouble many who have never heard of Urdu before arriving here. Secondly, it provides tables setting out exhaustively the declension of pronouns and the conjugation of verbs. And thirdly, it offers a useful collection of Hindi proverbs.

It is to be hoped that in a later edition Mr. Titi may, under happier circumstances, be able to expand this logical frame and give the reasons for many of his considered opinions of which only the conclusions now appear, or which are here sacrificed to the more generally accepted ideas: and that he may also set out his suggestions for making the Roman spelling of the language more consistent before it becomes too settled in its present form, now that its use is rapidly increasing alike among Indians and Europeans.

ANALYTICAL GUIDE to HINDŪSTĀNĪ.

1. Articles 'a' and 'the' are not translated. For definite statements render 'a' into 'ek', one or 'koi', some, certain, and 'the' into 'yih', this, 'woh', that. Translate 'there', when it means 'that place', by 'wahān', and when it means 'that direction', by 'udhar'.

2. Postpositions come after their substantives, which are then called 'oblique', as 'mard ka', of man. The simple po-po, denoting different cases are, ka, par, tak, men se, ko, ne.

- i. Possessive: of, —'s, ka (m. s.), ke (m. pl.), ki (f. s. & pl.)
- ii. Locative: on, at, par. in, for, men. up to, tak.
- iii. Ablative: from, by, with, than, for, off etc., se.
- iv. Dative: to, into, at, about to, ko.
- v. Agentative: by (doer), ne.

3. Substantives—genders and numbers, for (i) Nomin. (a.) M. ending in 'a', form pl. by changing 'a' into 'e'. (b) F. ending in 'ī', form pl. by adding 'ān', others by adding 'eñ'. (ii) Oblique: M-'a', form pl. by changing 'a' into 'on'; F. form pl. by adding 'on'.

	In	for nom. pl.	for obl. s.	for obl. pl.
M. 'a'		'a' & 'e'	'a' & 'e'	'a' & 'on'
M. others	} add 'on'.
F. 'ī'	add 'ān'
F. others	add 'eñ'

Nos. 5 and 6 are of usual actions; for continuous (rahna), progressive (jāna) and habitual (karna) actions see 14, 15 and 16 below.

d. Other useful tenses are :—

- *10. Dubious Past : main bol-ā h-ūṅga, I may have or (shall have) spoken. Shāyad bol-ā h-ūṅga, I might (doubt) have spoken. 'Zarūr bol-ā h-ūṅga, I must have spoken. hogā (used by itself) = will be, may be, must be, must have been. hojāega = will etc.,—become. woh Doctor hogā, he may be, will be, must be, must have been—ā Doctor.
- *11. Perfect Subjunctive : ham bol-e hoñ, we may have spoken.
- *12. Past Conditional : agar woh bol-e ho-te, same as No. 4.
13. Dubious Present : main bol-ta h-ūṅga, I may be speaking, (might, must be). ham bol-te hoñ, we may be speaking.
14. Continuous : (rahna, to continue) : (i). Present : 1. woh dekh raha hai, he is looking on (at the very time of speaking). 2. woh dekh-ta rah-ta hai, he is looking on (Strong continuity). 3. woh dekhta raha hai, he has been looking on. (ii). Past : 1. woh dekhta tha, he usually saw, (imperfect); woh dekh raha tha, he was looking on (at a certain time in the past). 2. woh dekhta rahta tha, he was keeping on looking (Strong continuity). 3. woh dekhta raha tha, he had been looking on. 4. woh dekhta raha, he remained looking on. (woh jāta raha, he passed away,—a simple past). (iii). Future : 1. woh bolta rahega, he will speak on. woh bol-raha hoga, he may be speaking on. 2. woh bolta rahta hoga, he may, (must) have been speaking on (strong continuity). 3. woh bolta raha hoga, he might have been speaking on.
15. Progressives : Tenses of jāna, to go on,—(i). Gradual : with a Present participle of a verb : 1. woh barhtā jāta hai, he is gradually advancing. 2. woh deta jāta hai, main khāta jāta hūñ, he goes on giving and I go on eating. (ii). Rapid : with a past participle of a verb : woh barha jāta hai, he goes on rapidly advancing. woh shor kiē jāta hai, he goes on roaring (in spite of interruption). (jab shor kiā jāta hai, when an uproar is being raised.—Passive).
16. Habitual : Tenses of karna, to do, with past part. of a verb. 1. main likhā karta hūñ, I am habitually writing. 2. main jāya kartha tha, I kept on going. 3. woh āj paṛha kiyā, he kept on reading to-day. woh din bhar khela kiyā, he kept on playing the whole day. Here, 'ne' is not used.

e. A Transitive Verb has an object or objects, (i) indirect (whom? with 'ko') and direct (what? with or without 'ko'). Its subject takes 'ne', (by-doer) in the tenses formed from a past participle, viz., Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 above. Because of post positions used with the subject and the objects, the verb is not governed by them, as to number and gender, and it is used in the masc. third person singular. If its direct object (without 'ko') is present, then it governs the verb. Its personal pronouns, (subjects), with 'ne', vary as under : (dena, to give, di-yā or di-ā, gave).

I	gave	main	ne	or	(mujh	garib	ne)	dīa	;	—us-	ko	rupai	dī-	e	hain
Thou	„	tū	ne		(tujh	„)	dīa	;	—us-	ko	kya	kīa	tha	?
He	„	us	ne		(us	„)	dīa	;	—tū-	ko	dekha	hoga
We	„	ham	ne		(ham	log-	on	ne)	dīa	;	—un-	ko	dekha	ho
You	„	tum	ne		(tum	„)	dīa	;	—ham-	ko	dekha	hota
They	„	unhon	ne		(un	„)	dīa	;	—mujh-	ko	kitāben	din

Examples:—1. us ne tamāsha dekha, he saw the show. 2. main ne usko (ind. obj.), kitāben (d. obj.) dīn, I gave him the books. 3. us ne us ko mujhe (ind. obj.) dīa, he gave it to me. 4. tūm ne kisko (ind. obj.) dekha? whom did you see? 5. ham ne kūchh dūshman (indefinite) dekhe, we saw some enemies. 6. āp-ne qulī ko (definite) dekha? did you see the cooly? 7. in log-on ne dekha, these people saw. 8. mere liē ek kitāb lao, Get (=bring for) me a book. 9. main ne sipahion aur afsaron ko yih kaha hai, I have told this to the sepoys and the officers. 10. darzi aur dhobi ne sunā, a tailor and a dhobi heard. 11. ham-ne aur āp-ne miḥnat kī, we and you toiled. 12. āp-ne chāha (wished), so (so), us wafādār ne āp-ko pukāra (called out); us-ne pāni bhara (filled in water); phir (then) jab āp-ne apna rukh (face) sarāsar palṭa (changed out-right), to us garib ne apna rāsta badla (changed his course). Note these verbs used as intr: us-ka jī chāha to woh pukāra, āp-ka dil na bhara; jab uski taqdir palṭi to woh khud sāra badla, his heart desired so he called out; you were not contented; when his fortune changed he himself was fully changed.

f. Passive Voice: dekhna, to see, t. v. (past part. of a v. + tenses of jāna). Dekha jāna, to be seen, likha jāna, to be written. Dekha jāta, being seen, dekha gaya, been seen. It is used only when the doer of the act is not mentioned, as John was seen to-day, John āj dekha gaya (passive); John was seen to-day by Adam, Ādam ne John ko āj dekha (active voice). Note.— Verbal ending 'a' (m. s.), 'e' to 'e', (for m. pl.); to 'i' (for f. s.) and to 'in' (for f. pl.).

Uses of English Tenses in the English language.

1. a. Present Indefinite denotes, (i) a usual or habitual action, he eats meat. (ii) general truths, honey is sweet. (iii) what is actually happening at the present moment, look how it rains. (iv) future action, I go to Delhi to-morrow. b. Present Continuous denotes an action taking place at the time of speaking, he is singing. c. Present Perfect denotes, (i) an action that has just been completed. (ii) is used denoting a past action as continuing to the present, we have lived here ten years, (and we are still here).

2. a. The Past Indefinite denotes, (i) a single act in the past, Adam got medal. (ii) an act going on in the past, while they danced (were dancing) we sang (were singing). (iii) a habitual action in the past, he studied many hours every day. b. The Past Continuous denotes an action, as going on at some point in past time. He was running when I saw him. c. Plu-Perfect denotes an action completed at some point in past time before another action was commenced, the play had begun before we bought the tickets.

3. a. The Future Indefinite denotes a single act, which has still to take place, I shall write this letter to-morrow. b. Future Continuous denotes an action, as going on at some point in future time, I shall be taking my dinner then. c. The Future Perfect denotes an action that will be completed at some point in future time ; they will have run the race by that time.

Note :--The Conditional past denotes, a condition and the sequence. If he had run, he would have won, Hindustani Tense No. 4. Defective English Verbs :-SHALL, as a principal verb denotes, command, threat, determination or inevitability. SHould denotes; duty, Will as a principal verb in the first person determination, promise or willingness ; WOuld denotes, also habitual action. OUGHT denotes, obligation or strong probability ; MUst, necessity, fixed determination, duty, certainty or inevitability. NEED, as a Negative and Interrogative, shows necessity. CAN, is principal verb, (H. am able to), shows ability or permission. DARE, venture, courage, (H. JUR-AT K. DILERI K). MAY (MIGHT), as a principal verb, shows possibility, permission ; as an active voice forms Subjunctive Mood, shows wish or purpose. They do not express time with precision.

8. Uses of Special Verbs : as auxiliaries

A. 1. SAKNA. 2. CHUKNA.

With the root of a verb ;

1. Sak-na, can, to be able to ; main bol sakunga, I can (or will be able to speak). 2. ho sake to lā-ye-ga, please bring, if possible.

2. Chuk-na, to finish, already, woh bol chuka hai, he has already spoken. In simple past, it shows ironically an impracticability. woh āj kām kar chuka ! it is not possible for him to finish the work today. Like shuru k. commence, khatam k. to finish, to complete, khatam hona, to be completed, are used with a noun to avoid ambiguity, us ne āj kām khatam kia, he completed the work today. jab woh sab kām kar chuka tab woh bola, when he finished his work, he spoke. jab woh mariz ko dekh chuka tab bola. when he finished examining the patient, he said. ham sab kār-cawāi-ān khatam kar chuke, we completed all the arrangements, already. pāni khatam ho chuka tha, kih kūch kā hukm sunāya gaya, all the water was already finished, when the orders were given to march. As Future perfect, jab main yih kām kar chukunga (or kar luṅga,* kar duṅga†) tab main āp se kahunga, I shall tell you, when I shall have done this work. Chukna, to mistake. bhūl chūk mu'āf kijiyege, please pardon the errors. (*for my benefit, † for your benefit).

B. 1. PARNA. 2. HONA. 3. CHAHIE, CHAHIE THA
4. MILNA. 5. LAGNA.

With 'ko' affixed to the English grammatical subject :

1. Parna, to fall to, to be obliged to do, (to be compelled to), and suddenly. i. us ko yahān āna pāga, he was obliged to come here (usually in the past tense). ii. us ko kitāben lāni parīn, he was obliged to bring the books. iii. us ko kitāben lāni haiṅ, he has to bring the books. iv. us ko kitāben lāni hogi, he shall have to bring the books. v. ham ko har-rose subah daftar jāna pāga hai, we have got to go to the office every morning. vi. ham ko abhi daftar jāna pāgega, I have got to go just now to the office. vii. Note the uses of parna as a principal verb :—to be laid, to fall from some invisible place, by chance or suddenly (mostly of lifeless objects) girna to fall from a known source with force, rās te meñ patthar parā hai; dekhiēga girnā nahīn, a stone is lying on the road take care, do not fall down. parna is (used of pāni, barf, kohr, kāl, muṣibat, etc.). bādalon se bijli us par giri, lightning fell on it from the clouds. woh khadde meñ gira, he fell in a pit. gir-parā fell down by chance. leṭ na, to lie down willingly. woh palang par leṭa hai, he is lying on the cot. As an auxiliary, it is also used to intensify the meaning of its accompanying root of the other verb-woh achānak ā parē, he came up suddenly.

2. Hona, (finite or principal verb, to have). us ko jāna hai, he has to go (no compulsion, duty or obligation). With an abstract noun, mujh ko bukhār hai, I have fever.

3. Chāhie, ought to, Chāhie tha, ought to have. us ko jāna chāhie, us ko jāna chāhie tha. (But note, woh chāhe ā-ē ya nā ā-ē, whether he comes or not). ii. use do kitāben (f) lāni chāhiyēn, he ought to bring two books. (chāhiye thīn, ought to have brought). iii. use Ghore beshak na lāne chāhiyēn, he certainly, ought not to bring the horses. As a principal verb: chāhna = to wish, (to love). main bol-na chāhta hūn, I wish to speak. He begged for a pardon, us ne mu'āfi māngī. us ne chāha kih āp jāēn, he wished you may go. chāhie kih āp jāēn, it is necessary that you should go. chāhe yeh, chāhe woh, either this or that. kya amir kya gada, sab ko jāna hai, the rich and the poor all have to depart (n. = chāh, chāhat, love, chāhita, beloved).

4. Milna, V. I. to come to hand, to fall to a person, to be mixed, (malna, v. t. to rub), has various significations, to be translated in English from the indication given by the preceding words. i. mujh ko ek kitāb mili, (to me one book came to hand), I received a book. ii. Find out the ball = search for, and bring it, goli ko dhūnd lāo, goli ko talāsh karo or goli ki talāsh karo, Get = bring, me a pen, mere lie ek qalam lāo). iii. Water is mixed with milk, pāni dūdh meñ mila hai. iv. Adam ki gūrat John se Respectful Imperative = root + ie or iye, iega, or iyega. Dekhna, to see Ap dekh-ie, --iye, dekh-iega or dekh-iyega, please (you) see.

milti julti hai, Adam's face resembles that of John. v. ham āpas meñ mil-gae, we agreed together. vi. us ka bayān, apñi ga-wāhi se miltā hai, his statement, tallies with his evidence.

a. When MILNA=to get, to receive, to find, (to search), do not use its Imperative, (mil-o), Conjunctive Participle (having done=root+ke, kar or kar ke, mil-kar etc.) or Infinitive of Purpose, (miln-e,-ko,-ke-wāste or ke lie), Hindustani has other equivalents for them as, vii. Find it out, us ka patā lagāo (v. t.) viii. Please receive this letter, is khaṭ ko qabūl farmāna (or karna). ix. Get the information anyhow, kisītarah khabar hāsil karo (or lāo). x. Having received the letter he laughed, khaṭ pākar, (pāke or pākar-ke), woh hansa. xi. He went to (=for the purpose of) find it out, woh (talāsh karne) or patā lagāne (or lagān-e ko, ke lie or ke-wāste) gaya.

b. MILNA=to be found, (a Passive form): When it indicates an English Passive verb for translation, and when it means "to resemble," its subject does not take 'ko'. xii. The horse was found, (mil-gaya=was found out), ghoṛa mila, and see No. iv. above.

c. MILNA=TO MEET: (i) by accident=ko milna, (ii) in an interview (intentionally)=se milna. xiii. Ādam mujh ko sarāḱ par mile (Adam to me came to hand on the road), Adam happened to meet me on the road; but Ādam mujh se ghar par mile, Adam interviewed me at my house.

d. MILĀNA (Causal v.t.)=to cause to meet, to mix, to bring together: xiv. in donoñ ko milā-kar dekho, having brought together, compare and see them both. xv. dūdh meñ chini (or shakar) milā-i, (he) mixed sugar with milk. xvi. Ādam ne use apñi taraf milā-i (or milā-lī), Adam won her over to his side. xvii. hisāb barābar milāo, adjust the accounts properly. xviii. unko Ādam ne kal John sāhab se milāya, (or milā-diyā,—for their benefit), Adam introduced them to Mr. John yesterday. MILWĀNA (double causal v. t.) to cause, to be mixed.

e. TO GET=to obtain=hāsil karna: xix. usne zindā machhli hāsil ki, he got=obtained by an effort, live fish.

5. a. Lagna, V. I., to be attached, to be fixed, to come in contact with; LAGĀNA, v. t. (causal), to attach, to fix. LAG-WĀNA, v. t. (double causal), cause to be fixed, as Principal Verbs are used extensively with various meanings derived from their preceding words, which govern the verbs, the grammatical subject being used in dative (with ko=to):

1. us-e yih phal achchha lagta hai, to him this fruit well attached is=he likes this fruit. 2. us-ko patthar laga, to him a stone was attached=a stone hit him (notice the Active Voice in English, and its subject viz. 'a stone'). 3. us-e thand lagti hai, he feels cold. sardi (f), jāra, garmi (f), ummed (f), sharm (f), bhūk (f), piās (f), nind (f), miṭha, khaṭṭa, swād, zā-iqa, der (f), waqt, ghanṭā, dar, fear, ḡussa, anger, be-imān, dishonest, dushmani, nafrat, lālach (f), greed, etc., etc. 4. tum ko yih coat achchha nahīn lagta, to you this coat is not well attached or fixed=you do not like this coat or this coat does not suit you well. 5. us ko hāth meṅ goli lagi, he was hit in hand by the bullet or the bullet hit him in the hand. 6. us ko der lagi, to āp ko dar laga, he took time, or he was late, so you got afraid. 7. us ko khaṭmal se khuṛī ki bīmāri lagi, he contacted the itch from bugs. 8. woh mera bhāi hai, he is my true-brother; woh mera bhāi lagta hai, he is my (not true) brother. woh mera bhāi sā lagta hai, he seems to be (like) my brother; mera ek bhāi hai, I have a brother. 9. yih shakhs āp ko kaisa lagta hai?, how does this man seem to you? or what is your opinion about this man?

Note:—a. chāhi-e m. f. is the polite Imperative of 'chāhn-a'. b. In this group 'B', if the subject is in dative (with ko=to), the object (if any and not oblique), governs these Aux. Verbs, and may or may not govern their preceding (principal) infinitives in gender; but if the object is oblique or is not mentioned, these verbs are used in the third person m. singular. If the subject is not oblique, it governs as usual, the whole verb. 1. us-e do kitāben lāni (or lāna) chāhi-yeṅ, he ought to bring two books. 2. us-e kitāben lāni (or lāna) paṅgi (or hoṅgi), he will have to bring the books. 3. 'aurteṅ ghar meṅ be-hosh paī haiṅ, ladies are lying unconscious in the house.

b. Where one of the substantives is Locative (with men, or par) or Ablative (with se), the other, being non-oblique and immediately preceding the verb (lagna) becomes its subject in English, and governs it.

C. 1. DENA, v. t. 2. PĀNA, 3. WĀLA; KO. 4. LACNA.

With Inflected Infinitive (a & e) : jān-e dena = to allow to go.

1. Dena, to allow, to let. Its substitute is to give permission of = ki-ijāzat dena, (to be permitted = ki-ijāzat hona). But where 'to let' is not equal to "to permit", then use only dena. 1. I let him write the letters, main ne usko khaṭ likhn-e di-ye, or main ne us ko khaṭ likhne ki ijāzat di. 2. I allowed him to play, main ne us ko kheln-e di-ya, or main ne us ko kheln-e ki ijāzat di. 3. Let him drink water, us ko pāni pīn-é do or us ko pāni pīn-é ki ijāzat do, 4. Lagāna (c.), Lagwāna (d. c.): 1 ham ne us ko sharāb pine lagāya, I made him (begin and go on) to drink wine (as a habit). 2 ham ne usko, kām kar-ne lagwāya hai, I have got him employed.

9. Intensive Verbs, as (DE-DE-NA, SUN-LENA etc.):

Auxiliary Verbs:

1 PĀNA. 2 RAKHNA. 3 MĀRNA. 4 CHORNA.
5 DĀLNA. 6 DENA. 7 LENA. 8 BAIṬHNA.
9 UṬHNA. 10 RAHNA. 11 PARNA. 12 JĀNA, ĀNA

a. A (principal) verbal root + Aux. verb = Intensive verb. Both the verbs must have relation and congruity of action with each other.

b. The verbal root retains its own meaning; the Aux. verb losing its own meaning, merges itself with the root, giving to the action stress, energy (suddenness) or completion (by the doer), sun-lena, hear carefully.

c. Hence if both (i. e., the root verb and the Aux. verb) retain their own meanings, admitting a pause between their two actions the whole is a compound verb, and not an Intensive verb as tor-lāna, (pluck and bring)=torkar lāna, which is more emphatic. If one verb is intransitive the whole compound verb is intransitive.

d. These are generally used in the affirmative sentences, as le-lo, take (it) up, but use mat-lo, do not take; kahiñ woh dekh na le, lest he should see; main us ko khā na-jāunga, I shall not gobble him up. jab tak woh na sun-le, until he listens. doctor sāhab ko na bulā-lūn?, shall I not send for the Doctor? 11. When to translate "to Have" a finite verb = "to posses", by ke pās hona, ka hona, meñ, par, or ko hona, where pās = in possession of, in keeping of and "hona" is a finite verb :—

1. Where the possessor is animate and possession is (a) transferable affix ke pās to the possessor: He has a pen-knife, uske pās chāqu hai. uska chāqu mez par ya mez meñ hai, his pen-knife is upon or in the table. uski kursi mez ke pās hai, his chair is near the table. (b) non-transferable, personal relations or limbs of the body, use simple genitive ka = of instead of ke-pās: He has one hand, us ka ek hāth hai. He has a brother, uska (or uske) ek bhāi hai. Some one of his brothers is here, uska koi ek bhāi yahāñ hai. He has (his) father (alive), uska bāp hai, (or uske wālid haiñ, plural of respect). uske pās chāqu para hai (aux. v.), a pen-knife is lying near him. He has one son, usko (or uske) ek beta hai. Use ko for abst. object, he has fever, usko bukhar hai.

2. Where the possessor is inanimate, use meñ or par as required, instead of ke pās: This garden has a well, is bāg meñ ek kū-āñ (bāuri) hai. This house has about two doors, is ghar meñ do-ek darwāze hain. He has a mark on his hand, us ke hāth par nishāñ hai. This house has an owner, is ghar ka mālik hai. I had (my) food, main ne khāna khāya or khā-lia. I had (my) tea, main ne chāe pili. (Sometimes ke (s.) is used for ka or ko, as an old practice).

12. Infinitives and their roots are used as nouns, mera kahna, my say. sabki boli everybody's language, uski pukār, chīkh, cry)

13. Direct expression is preferred, except where there is an order, telling or asking someone, to do something through some third person, where indirect expression is used, with Present subjunctive for an English Infinitive. Tell him to bring my book, usko kaho kih woh meri kitāb lāe. 2. What do you call potato in Urdu?, potato (ālū) ko Urdu mein kya kahte hain? 3. Let us go in and tell him to pay my hundred rupees he owes me, chalo andar chalein aur usko kahain kih hamare sau rupai ka den to tum par hai de do. 4. He told me that Adam asked him, what his name was, where did he come from and what did he want, usne mujh se kaha (related) kih Ādam ṡāḥab ne us se pūcha kih āpka nām kya hai, āp kahān se ā-rahe hain, aur āp kya chāhte hain. 5. I had asked him to trust me, main ne unse kaha tha kih, āp mujh par bharonā rakhie. 6. Tell him to hurry up; it will be dark by the time we got home, unse kaho kih jaldi karo; ghar pahunchte pahunchte rāt ho-jāegi. 7. Tell him that I shall pay the amount I owe you within a week, unse kahie kih, main āpke rupai ka den (qarz) ek-ādḥ hafte mein ada kar dūnga. 8. He told me that Adam broke the rope and the water jug, usne mujh se kaha kih, Ādam ne rassā tor dāla, aur pāni ka kūza phor dāla.
